...the back of my mind, I had a desire to travel or do retail accounts. Her first wholesale was with a store on Balboa Island. I put my stuff in a backpack, got my bike with my dog, and went down there. I was an nervous piece. From there she built a website and packed her bags for her first wholesale trade show in Los Angeles. When asked to identify a turning point in her business, she replied "It was after a tradeshow, what feels like a million years ago, I came home with a stack of orders. I realized that this may actually work." I say, she is an established, successful jewelry designer and sells her jewelry through hundreds of retail outlets across the country, including her own flagship location.

In 2008, the jewelry designer became a retailer. Hiking past an empty storefront on Main Street in Huntington Beach, she gave her the idea to open a brick-and-mortar location. "The funny thing is, I never thought much about opening a store... it just kind of happened. I've always operated on intuition, and something told me to just do it."
